United Kingdom

Stephen Mumberson, Vice Chair of the Printmakers Council of the UK and the selection committee of the United Kingdom Printmakers for this 6th Hancock Graphic Art Biennial, was pleased to announce that printmakers have been invited to the Biennial. The PMC was founded in 1965 to promote the art of printmaking and the work of contemporary printmakers. The membership is broad and open to work covering several digital print forms, print construction workshops, print distribution, and all the traditional forms of print. PMC holds regular meetings, seminars, and workshops around Britain.

Through our careful selection process for this exhibition, we wanted to show the work that demonstrated a rich diversity of printmaking processes from traditional print methods such as etching to the more recent digital enhanced prints to indicate the work by older and established printmakers and show new work by younger artists just emerging from University. Showing an ever-increasing variety of styles and approaches in their work and subject matter.

Printmaking in Britain has gained a new vigour with the introduction of new digital possibilities and the incorporation of traditional methods of print. The structure of print practice has changed in recent years, with a greater emphasis on new ideas and new materials. This has led to the creation of new print forms, new subjects, and a wide range of approaches.

The use of digital imaging makes this an exciting, challenging, and innovative time to be an artist printmaker investigating new possibilities. It also encouraged a rapid evolution of printmaking processes. The theme of this year's Biennial is "Printmaking in Britain." ThePrintmakers Council of the United Kingdom Printmakers for this 6th Hancock Graphic Art Biennial, was pleased to announce that printmakers have been invited to the Biennial. The PMC was founded in 1965 to promote the art of printmaking and the work of contemporary printmakers. The membership is broad and open to work covering several digital print forms, print construction workshops, print distribution, and all the traditional forms of print. PMC holds regular meetings, seminars, and workshops around Britain.

Through our careful selection process for this exhibition, we wanted to show the work that demonstrated a rich diversity of printmaking processes from traditional print methods such as etching to the more recent digital enhanced prints to indicate the work by older and established printmakers and show new work by younger artists just emerging from University. Showing an ever-increasing variety of styles and approaches in their work and subject matter.

Printmaking in Britain has gained a new vigour with the introduction of new digital possibilities and the incorporation of traditional methods of print. The structure of print practice has changed in recent years, with a greater emphasis on new ideas and new materials. This has led to the creation of new print forms, new subjects, and a wide range of approaches.

The use of digital imaging makes this an exciting, challenging, and innovative time to be an artist printmaker investigating new possibilities. It also encouraged a rapid evolution of printmaking processes. The theme of this year's Biennial is "Printmaking in Britain."